Tuzla

Tuzla is a city and municipality in Bosnia and Herzegovina. At the time of the 2011 census, the municipality had 200,000 inhabitants. After Sarajevo, and Banja Luka, Tuzla is the third largest city in Bosnia and Herzegovina, and the seat of the Tuzla Canton and Tuzla Municipality. The name "Tuzla" is the Turkish word for salt mine, and refers to the extensive salt deposits found underneath the city. The city of Tuzla is home to Europe's only salt lake as part of its central park. One of the most influential writers in the Balkans, Meša Selimovic hails from Tuzla. The climate is moderate continental. The town was not spared the atrocities of the Bosnian War. On May 25, 1995, an attack on Tuzla killed 71 people, mostly children and injured 200 persons in Tuzla massacre when a shell hit the central street and its promenade. Several sports teams from Tuzla have participated in international competitions. Almost all of Tuzla's sports teams are named Sloboda, meaning freedom. The most popular sports in Tuzla include football (FK Sloboda); karate (KBS Tuzla-Sinbra) and many others. The women's basketball team Jedinstvo Aida were European club champions in the late eighties, with the most famous sports woman from Tuzla in their midst Razija Mujanovic. The first and oldest sport in Tuzla is gymnastics.
